The Miller Canfield Health Law attorneys focus on providing regulatory, transactional and litigation services to physicians by representing, counseling and negotiating on their behalf in all legal and business matters.

To more efficiently and effectively respond with counsel and solutions to health care clients' specific needs, challenges and opportunities, our attorneys are active participants in multi-institutional and multi-specialty arrangements and affiliations, and work at the cutting edge of several new delivery systems and models, such as leading in the creation and structuring of the physician owned "megamedaplex" and the successful creation of an array of joint and co-management ventures.

Members of the group belong to national and state organizations dedicated to new developments in the industry and continuing education for health care lawyers, and they participate in seminars and meetings as faculty and thought leaders.

For example, in 2009 the American Health Lawyers Association (AHLA) recognized our health law practice with "Top Honors" for both our number of member lawyers and our number of lawyers who participate in AHLA national practice groups.

We devote time and resources to keeping abreast of all aspects of this fast-changing area of law and clients reap tangible benefits as a result of our commitment to the field.
