Paul Durbin represents financial institutions, international corporations, and governments in financings and corporate transactions. He advises on compliance with federal and state securities laws in private placements and public debt offerings. He has also represented corporate borrowers and financial institutions in the negotiation and documentation of secured and unsecured loans and private placements.

He also serves as outside corporate counsel to a wide range of early stage companies. Given his extensive experience with state and local governments, Paul works with all levels of government for clients doing business with or seeking development incentives from governmental entities. He also has represented numerous energy companies in their efforts to find suitable sites and obtain the financing required to build generation and manufacturing facilities in the United States.

Paul has worked on numerous significant financings over the years for public and commercial borrowers. He serves as bond counsel and underwriter's counsel in tax increment revenue, general obligation, and revenue bonds issuances.

"My top priority is to help my clients capitalize on opportunities and achieve their business and financing objectives."
