An expert in the meticulous drafting of wills, trusts and other estate-planning documents, Kenneth E. Konop helps his clients reduce their tax burdens as well as ensuring that their wishes are fully carried out, thereby minimizing or eliminating any potential conflicts that may arise. When estate-related matters end up in court, Ken is a tough advocate for his clients. Ken is also experienced in representing closely held corporations and their owners.

"Working with clients is an educational process. I always make every effort to ensure that they are clear on what can be accomplished and at what cost. I don't expect them to do as I say, rather I want my clients to understand the issues. So I'm always willing to answer questions."

EXPERIENCE

Ken represented the estate of a man who had left all of his property to the state of Michigan. When the man's son contested the matter in court, Ken successfully defended the validity of his client's decision. As a result, the decedent's wishes were implemented precisely as he had intended.

"A client recently told me he felt very comfortable working with me. I believe that's the essence of good representation. Your clients have to feel good about you."
